INFORMATION ON MICROFINANCE

General aspects of Microfinance

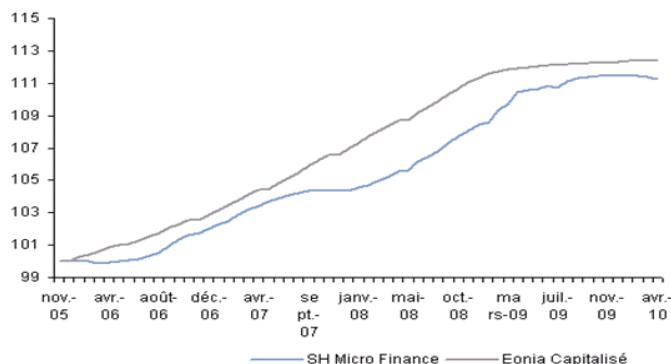

The majority of the population in developing countries lives below the poverty line. Their income depends on their developing small economic activities called micro-enterprises. There are currently around 500 million small and micro enterprises. Their needs are highly specific with an average annual credit requirement of just $500. In contrast to local money-lenders, whose usurious interest rates keep micro-entrepreneurs in a permanent state of dependence and misery, microfinance institutions meet their requirements properly. Rather than develop a relationship of dependence they strive to stimulate the spirit of enterprise. Microfinance institutions are specialised financial intermediaries. There are several thousand throughout the world (including NGOs, cooperatives and banks). This type of intermediation has been proven very effective and the results are highly convincing, with a very low default rate of around just 3%.
