

OCTOBER HIGHLIGHTS

Emerging Market spreads held up in an increasingly turbulent market environment, narrowing by 10 bps to 388 bps, whereas the 5y U.S. treasury yield increased by 11 bps to 0.38%. Volatility increased substantially in October, with the VIX rising from 26 to 38. Market sentiment was affected by resurgence in Covid-19 cases around the world, vaccine developments and newly announced lockdown measures in Europe. Another fiscal stimulus in the U.S. did not materialize, negatively affecting market sentiment. In addition, the U.S. presidential election scheduled for early November moved into focus. The possibility of post-election uncertainty could keep volatility at elevated levels for some time. In Emerging Markets, Chilean voters supported a referendum on drafting a new constitution which could put a larger economic and social burden on public finances. The conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan continued to rage on, with the collapse of the third ceasefire in less than a month. Due to the challenging market environment, the Fund maintains its focus on high-quality bonds.
